Grasping the Intangible at Heritage Places
A Symposium presented by the Australia ICOMOS National Scientific Committee on Intangible Cultural Heritage
Saturday 18 October 2014, 9am – 5.30pm, University College, Parkville, Melbourne

Knowledge, language, skills, traditions ... these intangible expressions of cultural heritage help define who we are, our cultural identity and our connections to others.

Passed along the generations, intangible cultural heritage is mutable, responding to changes in the environment, circumstances and technology.

The connections between intangible cultural heritage and place are the focus for this Symposium, along with the practical implications of incorporating intangible cultural heritage into heritage place planning and management.

The Symposium will address a range of challenges relevant to identifying, recording, sustaining and interpreting intangible cultural heritage and its values. Case studies presented by the speakers will contribute towards building a tool box of good practice for all Australian heritage practitioners.

The Symposium will conclude with the launch of the Australia ICOMOS National Scientific Committee on Intangible Cultural Heritage.

Everyone with an interest in intangible cultural heritage is welcome to attend.
